

The Subir and Malini Chowdhury Center for Bangladesh Studies

at UC Berkeley presents

The Invisible Reality of 'Chinthar Roge' (A Life of Chronic Worry): The Illness of Poverty in Dhaka's Urban Slum Settlements

a talk by

Sabina Rashid

Professor and Dean, BRAC University School of Public Health

Sabina Faiz Rashid, PhD, is Dean & Professor at BRAC James P Grant School of Public Health, BRAC University. She received her training in Medical Anthropology from The Australian National University, Canberra, Australia. She has been working in Bangladesh since 1993 and her areas of interest and expertise are qualitative and ethnographic research. Her research focuses on gender, reproductive and sexual health, sexuality and the emotional well-being of adolescents, women, men and marginalized populations. A significant portion of her research has focused on informal slum settlements. She is interested in how structural and social inequalities create greater vulnerability for the poorest and impact on their ability to realize their fundamental health and human rights. She has been involved in research for over 20 years and is actively engaged in translating knowledge into action at the grassroots and national level and is a member of several national and international policy and advocacy committees. At the School, she founded the Centre of Gender and Sexual and Reproductive Health and Rights in 2008 and co-founded the Centre on Urban Equity and Health in 2013, focusing on generating evidence, capacity building/training and influencing policy.

Tuesday, September 25, 2018
12-2 p.m.
10 Stephens Hall

Event cosponsor: Institute for South Asia Studies, Berkeley Center for Social Medicine
Event is free & open to public | 510-642-3608 | chowdhurycenter.berkeley.edu/