SALIL TRIPATHI is a contributing editor at Mint and Caravan, both published in India, and lives in London. He chairs PEN International’s Writers in Prison Committee. He was born in Bombay and studied at New Era School and later Sydenham College, and did his MBA at Amos Tuck School, Dartmouth College in the U.S. He has been a correspondent at India Today, and in 1991 he moved to Singapore, where he was regional economics correspondent for Far Eastern Economic Review. He moved to London in 1999 and has written for publications including Wall Street Journal, New York Times, Washington Post, New Republic, Guardian, The New Yorker, and others. His journalism has won the Red Ink Prize for human rights journalism from the Mumbai Press Club, a Bastiat Prize, and the Citibank Pan Asia Journalism Award. His books include Offence: The Hindu Case (Seagull, 2009); The Colonel Who Would Not Repent (Aleph, 2014, and Yale, 2016), and Detours: Songs of the Open Road (Tranquebar, 2015). Aleph will publish his next book, about Gujaratis, in 2018.

Monday, October 2, 2017
5 - 7 pm
ISAS Conf. Room (10 Stephens Hall)

Talk will include a book sale/signing

Event cosponsored by the Institute for South Asia Studies

More information at chowdhurycenter.berkeley.edu